WILLIMANTIC

Alleged Rusty Hinges on Trap Door Grounds for $5,000 Suit.

Papers in a suit against the American Thread company have been filed in the state of Connecticut. The suit is for $5,000 and the writ has been served on the company.

The action is brought by Attorney Samuel B. Harvey, representing Alford Beaulieu, administrator of the estate of Camille Calise, who was killed while at work for the American Thread company. Damages of $5,000, the full amount allowed by law, are claimed.

Mr. Calise was a carpenter in the employ of the company and lost his life March 1, 1909, by falling from the tower in the dye house to the stone floor below. It is alleged in the complaint that negligence on the part of the company was responsible for his death, because the trap door through which he fell was not in proper repair.

Calise stepped on it and his weight broke it, sending him to the floor below, killing him instantly, his skull being fractured. It is alleged that the hinges that held the door had become weakened because they had been allowed to rust.

The case is returnable in the superior court. An effort will be made to have it tried at the next term of court to be held in this city.

LIQUOR CAUSES ASSAULT AT 37 STONE ROW.

There was a Saturday night rough-house at 37 Stone Row. Officers were called to take the trip down there and quiet things a bit. One man who lives at the number mentioned was in custody by a stone in the hands of Andrew Dunbrook, who got away in the semi-darkness and general confusion. Sunday morning shortly before 6 o'clock Officer Paulus was coming up from the Lower Village and nailed the perpetrator of the assault and landed him in the station house. He was booked on the charge of assault and will be arraigned in court this morning. The man in 37 Stone Row was badly cut in the head. It is believed that the principals were under the influence of liquor and got into an argument.
